Whiskies

SCOTLAND

SPEYSIDE

Speyside whisky can be classified as falling into two categories. At one end of the spectrum there are light, grassy, 'lunchtime whiskies', at the other end lie the rich, sweet, sherried 'dinnertime whiskies'.

LOWLAND

With currently only 5 distilleries, this region is known for light and grassy, more gentle and floral whiskies. In this region, triple distillation is preferred, which makes the whisky more delicate.

HIGHLAND

Scotland's largest whisky region boasts a dizzying array of styles, from rich and textured to fragrantly floral, as benefits an ever-changing landscape of coastline, moor and mountain.

ISLANDS

There are nearly 800 islands scattered off Scotland's coastline. Excluding the whisky hotspot of Islay, the islands are home to a bright mix of styles, from light citrus, salty seaspray to smoky and peaty.

IRELAND

After nearly being taxed to extinction Irish whiskey is making a huge comeback with more and more distilleries popping up all over the emerald isle. Peat is rarely used and triple distillation is standard, which makes Irish whiskey smooth and very palatable to all.
